The stereotype of Jews eating Chinese food [on Christmas] doesn't work for us health-conscious gays," says Hebro founder Jayson Littman. That's why his organization, which plans and promotes events for the city's gay Jewish community, throws its annual Christmas Jewbilee. This year's event takes over Stage 48 on Christmas Eve with tunes by DJ Xavier and a performance by drag diva Shequida.

But what else is there for a gay Jew to do on Santa's big day? Littman has a few suggestions... —JR

1 PURGE THE TRICKS
 "This is the perfect time to clean out your smartphones of anyone with the last name of 'Grindr,' 'A4A' or 'Scruff' and delete any pictures of any recognizable genitalia—especially the uncut ones; make your mother proud. This will allow for a fresh start of the new year!"

2 A BOYFRIEND FOR CHRISTMAS
 "Every goy wants a Jewish boyfriend, so they'll never have to miss a Christmas at home with their own family. Snag one quick and maybe find out if their Christmas presents are bigger than your Hanukkah ones."

3 DRINK! DRINK! DRINK!
 "Drink. Lots. Of. Alcohol. This will help subside the Christmas envy us Jews have had for generations. Then wish you were Christian, avoid dairy and go see a movie."

4 HAVE A JEWBILEE
 "Attend Hebro's Christmas Eve Jewbilee! This is your perfect opportunity to snag a Jewsband. With all the blond-haired/blue-eyed tall boys named Patrick, Chris, Wade and Tristan at home wearing their Christmas sweaters and eating ham, the Jews at the Jewbilee will not be distracted by un-kosher meat. They'll all be yours!"

5 COUNT YOUR BLESSINGS
 "You think you have it bad living in a shoebox-sized apartment with three piggy gays on the top floor of a walkup in Astoria? Well, Mary had to give birth in a barn with actual animals and three wise men! After you've thought about this, head out and shop for an amazing New Year's outfit!"
